

First Aid Training

First aid training is a legal requirement within all workplaces. As an employer you need to ensure that your employees have access to appropriate first aid care in the workplace. It helps to save lives and the skills that are developed are invaluable.

Why do your employees need First Aid Training?

It is a legal requirement under the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974. For small workplaces there must be an appointed person. For larger workplaces there must be a qualified first aider. This should be assessed based upon the hazards and risks that the employees face within their job roles.

Who should do this training?

An appropriate person available and able to deal with any first aid emergencies within the workplace.

Why choose us as your training provider?

We are a Grade 1 provider. We will work with you to provide a service that is tailored to meet your specific organisations needs. We ensure that the delivery is flexible; at a time and place to suit you and is delivered by highly qualified staff with relevant occupational competence within the field. You can book the delivery in your own workplace or you can attend a course at The Warrington Business School. Training is delivered through a HSE registered organisation.
