

ILM Level 4 Award in Management

ILM Level 4 Qualifications in Management are designed to give practicing or aspiring middle managers a solid foundation for their formal development as a manager. The qualification also acts as bridge between Level 3 and Level 5 qualifications, preparing learners for the more rigorous demands of study at a higher level. .

Why do your employees need training?

To increase their management skills and expertise when working in a first line management capacity. Management training increases organisation effectiveness, staff morale and motivation and can reduce organisation skills gaps.

Who should do this training?

Practicing or aspiring first line managers.

What's involved?

One research project based on the choice of the candidate to meet organisation needs.

What type of training is available?

The Award in Management is a 12 week qualification made up of two mandatory units – 'Understanding the management role' and 'Developing management skills' Here learners cover the core research, analysis and group working skills essential to practicing or potential middle managers. This is a research project and the candidates need to know Management fundamentals and report writing format in order to partake.
